Windows 8's built-in task manager is a pretty standard piece of software. It's got a very basic interface, with basic controls, with a basic UI, and it doesn't bring anything particularly new to the table. As a default tool, there isn't really anything to mess with except to load it up, and click on an item in the list. But the Windows task manager lets you do a lot more. It shows you all the files currently running on your system, the amount of memory that's available to the application, and even how many processes are currently running on your PC. If you're wanting to look at a web page without opening a browser, or just want to look at the page before you get around to visiting it, FreeExplore is a very handy tool. It works by using the Internet Explorer Enhanced Privacy Mode, so it's not going to be entirely accurate, but it should still be good enough. The basic interface is a rather basic piece of software. AutomaticAppv.org is a fan site that uses automatic webcrawlers and scrapers to populate static, manually-edited website content with relevant program details. Here, we scrape for application information and automatically sort the applications according to categories like Categories, Release Date, Number of Downloads, Apps That Suck, or Releasing Party. This information is manually gathered from the Android Market or the Amazon Appstore market. If we find a free application that is also available on Amazon or in the Android Market, it will appear on both websites. * Scrape date refers to when the application was last updated in the application store. * Scrape time is when the application was first added to the application store. * Data is shown in the format provided by the application store, such as May 1 or May 10, 2011. Once we have gathered this information for a given application, we post it here. If your application is on this list, please take a few moments to help us make this site better. Contact us if you notice any incorrect information or outdated link. If you've had problems with your application not auto-updating, please mention it. It's fixed and ready to go. We also know there are other programs to check for updates and will include those here, and the next time it checks for updates it will include this application. if you have any other information you would like to provide, such as the homepage of the application, this is a perfect place to do so. If we've been too quick in scraping the application we're caching it for another scrape and will be more thorough next time. How To Download.APK For Android We've updated our application now to be able to scan the Android Market directly. This will allow for more checks, but we will never scrape a personal account as it is not allowed. Only applications that have free applications and developers are allowed to be scraped. PCWinMan reports that it is an excellent, simple Windows open source tool for the purpose of creating custom live feedback dialogs with the help of an XML file. The software has a main window, from which you can access most of the tools. The main window of the program is merely a gray area on the left of the screen, while the main window on the right is the actual open dialog. The dialog area is very simple and allows the user to edit the description and category, as well as the description of the tool itself. PCWinMan allows for output in several different formats, such as HTML, CSV, XML, and much more. When browsing this menu, you can easily see the GUI of the program, which appears rather basic. You can also access the XML editor through the File menu, but then you can only add information to an existing file. Adding XML to a new file is not an option. The application is mainly comprised of basic functions, such as setting up the main window, adding objects to it, and generating XML and other file formats. Bottom line PCWinMan is an easy-to-use tool that allows you to customize live dialogs with the help of an XML file.
