Maturation of the human fetal parathyroid gland. The mammalian parathyroid gland is composed of three histologically distinct areas: the chief cell, the oxyphil cell, and the basal cell. The chief cell is responsible for the secretion of parathyroid hormone (PTH) and appears in the fetus in week 13 of gestation. In contrast, the oxyphil cell is a modified type of chief cell that is first seen in the first trimester fetus. This article deals with the differentiation of the oxyphil cell and describes the appearance of the oxyphil cell in preterm and term human fetuses in the second trimester. Sections from 38 human fetal glands ranging from 24 weeks' to 39 weeks' gestation were stained for PTH, parathyroid hormone-related peptide (PTHrP), and protein gene product 9.5 (PGP). PTH was present in the cytoplasm of chief cells at all stages, and the number increased with gestational age. The number of oxyphil cells rose in the second trimester. PTHrP immunoreactivity was present in the cytoplasm of the chief and oxyphil cells, and in the nucleus of the chief cell. PGP immunoreactivity was present in oxyphil cells only at 24 weeks' gestation, and PGP-positive chief cells were seen after 25 weeks'. This study describes the time of appearance of the oxyphil cell in the second trimester of gestation. The appearance of the oxyphil cell was not a uniform event, and oxyphil cells became more numerous as gestational age increased. The PGP expression in the oxyphil cells suggested that they were more differentiated than the other cell types.

Q: how to add Java library to eclipse workspace Is there a way to automatically add a java library to a specific Eclipse workspace (eg I add an artifact jar to the buildpath of a project)? under Java -> Build Path, expand the Libraries tab and click on Add JARs... [Psychological distress among workers in healthcare centers]. Healthcare workers are at high risk for developing mental disorders, such as depression and anxiety disorders, as well as burnout, which leads to chronic stress and eventually negatively affect their work. Considering the low level of knowledge about the prevalence of mental health problems in this population and the difficulties of the healthcare professional to get access to routine mental health services and use of specialized healthcare, the purpose of this study was to evaluate the extent of psychological distress in a population of healthcare workers in a general hospital, to measure their knowledge of this problem, and to establish the prevalence of these disorders. A survey of psychological distress of healthcare professionals was conducted through self-administered questionnaires applied to a cross-sectional sample of healthcare workers in five different units. Data were analyzed with the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS) version 11.0. The 95% confidence intervals were considered at all times. In total, 137 questionnaires were completed. The mean age of the sample was 41.25 years (SD: 11.38). Only 31% of the participants had a university degree. There were significant differences between the different specialties ($p=.01$). The prevalence of psychological distress was 82% (95% CI, 76-89). Within the 30% with high scores (upper quartile) for anxiety and depression, of the variables considered were present the following: lack of participation in activities with friends and family, previous psychiatric history, job dissatisfaction, lack of balance between work and personal life, isolation, alcohol and caffeine consumption, and use of mobile phones on the job. This study demonstrated the high prevalence of psychological distress in healthcare workers in a general hospital. These results show the need to implement measures and actions aimed at preventing or treating this condition to help them continue in their work. The present invention relates generally to a collector, and more particularly to a collector adapted for use in
