Download Marmoset Hexels.Protective effect of propofol against liver injury induced by ischemia and reperfusion in rats. The protective effect of propofol on ischemia/reperfusion (I/R) injury in liver was investigated. Thirty-six male Wistar rats were randomly divided into three groups (n=12): sham group (group I), propofol group (group II) and ischemia/reperfusion group (group III). The preservation solution consisted of University of Wisconsin (UW) solution containing 6% hydroxyethyl starch (HES). After the rat liver was subjected to partial warm ischemia for 30 minutes (I/R group), the rats were treated with UW solution containing 6% HES, propofol solution or UW solution alone, respectively. In group III, the rat livers were reperfused by a non-blood perfusion method. At 1 and 8 hours after reperfusion the alanine aminotransferase (ALT) and aspartate aminotransferase (AST) levels in serum were evaluated. Hepatic tissue samples were taken for histopathological examinations at 8 hours. At 1 hour after reperfusion, the ALT and AST levels in group II were significantly lower than those in group I (p 3e33713323
