A walk through of the latest trends in kitchen and bath design from the best designers in the industry. By Naneesha Sudeshir Humanity has already reached a precipitous stage of its existence where we have to fight to survive, wage war to push back the onslaught of nature and bear the burden of environmental disasters for which we have not consented. We have inherited a legacy of crisis and we must figure out how to contend with our present existence. There is no magic button or eureka solution to saving the planet. There are many issues that we must address. However, none of these issues are as daunting as the challenge of dealing with oil spills. In our early days, we had to conserve water. But today, when people need water most, we are so busy in fighting with the environment that we do not even give a thought to the safety of it. Oil spills are just one more issue that must be addressed. However, there is a wide range of issues that must be addressed ranging from reducing greenhouse emissions, recovery strategies, waste disposal, water management, and much more. Oil spills are one of the biggest problems that we face. Oil spills are happening at a more alarming rate now than ever before, affecting hundreds of kilometers of marine coastlines on a regular basis.

Large numbers of coastal habitats are degraded from the oil spills because of the toxicity of oil which adversely affect the marine life. And the oil will eventually sink to the bottom of the ocean. The main solution being given by the oil industry is that the society should not punish them for the crimes they commit. And it is not the right to bear a grudge against them. They are the ones responsible for cleaning up the mess that they have made. Why should the middle class people who pay for the pollution, have to pay for the cleanup process as well? On the other hand, the oil industries should pay for the money that they have made from the oil spill. And it is not the right of any society to do anything against the oil industry.
