ROAD TO VICTORY∞!

► FAST-PACE ACTION THEME Join the challenging fight against the evil forces that threaten the world. Along the way, you will traverse through turn-based battles where you command monsters, or fight thousands of crowds of monsters in real-time. In other words, it's fast-paced action with a unique theme where you can join all of your old friends to restore their lost memories. Do you still remember when a big-breasted woman got drunk and got into a fight at a disco in the 1980's? The U.N. Grand Assembly of Elden Lords is the perfect opportunity to give it a go! ► Turn-Based Battles In a turn-based battle, you do not play against an enemy in a fight, but rather make your own enemy. Instead of the typical hit-and-run tactics, a chain of chain reaction is possible, and the fight will unfold with new components placed on the battlefield according to your strategy, so there is always the new twist that you can anticipate. ► Exciting 3D Environments with High Chaotic Difficulty Every battle occurs in the detailed environments that make you feel as if you are in a real 3D game. Your sword and magical attacks will change your attack according to the terrain. A simple one-to-one matching of the environment will provide you with a satisfying variety, as if it's a virtual toy town. In addition, the breadth of the view will easily deceive you, allowing you to get a feeling of wide-angle. ► Strong Link Generation Bring your own friends along on your journey and enjoy a lush online experience! Q: Eclipse plugin development I'm writing a Eclipse plugin and need advice about where to start. The plugin adds a standard action to the context menu to open a dialog. Where do I have to start? Just adding menu entries to the editor? I'd like to create a plugin that is already maintained by the Eclipse community. If I develop something new, will it get included into the main Eclipse distribution? If yes, how? A: If you start at the Eclipse Main Menu, everything is provided and setup for you. Every plugin is in a plugin project. The standard actions are provided by the Eclipse IActionBars-interface. On the Java side of the Eclipse-code, the Java-Action-Registry is a key-word for writing actions and menus. The tutorials and tips on the Eclipse-site, especially on the RCP-page are very useful: Writing an Eclipse Plugin Eclipse Plug-in Developer's Guide How to Build Java-Applications With the Eclipse IDE If you go on a more detailed level, you can see in the RCP-Codebase where the relevant parts are developed. e4-rcp-trunk e4-rcp-subprojects org.eclipse.ui.rcp org.eclipse.help org.eclipse.ui.views org.eclipse.ui.workbench Often, the Java-Code comes together with the help of other Eclipse-Stuff and the Plugin-SDK which usually provides many helper-methods and classes for the developers. Owl is the Japanese version of the game. Various devices and methods for measuring total body potassium (T-pot), as well as total body nitrogen and total body carbon, have been developed and are known in the art. An accurate T-pot test is of great interest for a variety of medical purposes. For example, T-pot tests are helpful in the diagnosis, management and prognosis of various illnesses and diseases, as well as being of great interest in the body of sport and physical exercise science. Generally, T-pot testing is performed by measuring the total potassium content of a subject's body to confirm, monitor and support accurate potassium levels in a subject. This may be achieved by using potassium sulfate and magnesium sulfate in a potentiometric T-pot test (also referred to as a K⁺ test or a T-pot test). Potassium sulfate and magnesium sulfate are both strong electrolytes, which means that their cations, potassium and magnesium, move easily through body cells. However, potassium is less strongly absorbed than magnesium. By using different concentrations of potassium sulfate and magnesium sulfate, the amount of potassium in the body can be measured accurately. The total body potassium is used to verify the accuracy of measuring total body nitrogen. The total body nitrogen and total body carbon can also be measured using potassium sulfate and magnesium sulfate to estimate the rate of decomposition of the body, and thereby, better understand or predict how the body reacts to various influences. Examples of K⁺ tests are described in the following publications and patents which are incorporated herein by reference in their entirety: U.S. Pat. No. 4,324,570 to Ubbink et al. discloses a method and apparatus for determining the total body water content of human subjects. U.S. Pat. No. 4,884,590 to Ubbink et al. discloses a method and apparatus for determining the total body water content of human subjects. U.S. Pat. No. 4,922,928 to Ibsen et al. discloses a T-pot test system using a magnesium sulfate suspension of magnesium salts of known concentration and analysis of whole blood for potassium. U.S. Pat. No. 5,350,353 to Ubbink et al. discloses a method and apparatus for determining the total body water content of human subjects wherein a sample of body fluid is diluted with an aqueous solution of sodium chloride.
