Police said the shooting of a 25-year-old UC Berkeley student occurred shortly before 5:30 p.m. on the 300 block of Durant Avenue at the corner of Solano Avenue. The victim, believed to be a man, suffered critical injuries to his head and chest, according to police, and he was transported to the hospital. Police have not yet confirmed whether the victim's injuries were self-inflicted. Following the shooting, dozens of Berkeley citizens, some with their faces covered, and police threw rocks at buildings and smashed windows. Scenes from the protests escalated as people who believe the event was about white supremacy hurled projectiles at police and smashed windows at various businesses on Telegraph Avenue. Berkeley police fired pepper spray and non-lethal rounds from a less-lethal shotgun at people blocking the sidewalk. "There are a lot of very frustrated people. ... There are a lot of feelings of rage," said Berkeley Police Chief Margo Bennett, who added that she was afraid some of the protesters could not distinguish between the police and the students. Bennett said she believes the campus is safer than before the riots, but she warned that people need to keep walking in groups in known locations and report suspicious individuals. Police advised the campus community to stay indoors and avoid gatherings. "We don't want to have to use force, but I am prepared to deploy it if necessary," Bennett said. "We are not interested in rioting, but I think you are seeing that already." UC Berkeley Chancellor Carol Christ said the campus would go into "soft lockdown" and cancel classes Thursday as a precaution. Christ said the campus would also cancel the evening meal and mandatory gatherings on the Hill. Christ said campus security officers showed "discipline and restraint
