The efficacy of vitamin E (50 mg daily for 6 weeks) in Raynaud's syndrome was assessed in a double-blind, placebo-controlled, randomized trial involving 46 patients. The initial symptom score, symptoms, disease stage, and pinprick score improved significantly after 6 weeks in the vitamin E group compared to the placebo group. At the end of the study, scores on the West Haven Yale Multidimensional Assessment of Raynaud's Disease (WH-MARD) were, respectively, 8.6, 7.6, and 6.0 for the placebo, and 8.9, 7.0, and 7.3 for the vitamin E group (p = 0.15, p = 0.10, p = 0.01). The difference in score between the two groups was not significant in the analysis of covariance. The duration of attacks decreased significantly in the vitamin E group from 7.5 +/- 6.3 h to 1.5 +/- 1.5 h (p or = 10% increase in finger skin temperature. We conclude that vitamin E (50 mg daily) is not effective in Raynaud's syndrome. Are you tired of seeing the same old haircuts?
