This is a game about action. You pilot a winged fighter/helicopter-like craft called the Darjail, which is soaring through a landscape of endless mountains and valleys. You are tasked with hunting down and destroying enemy ships and aircraft, all the while avoiding enemy detection systems and avoiding incoming hostile fire. Armed with machine guns and rocket launchers the Darjail is your ticket to glory and adds a new dimension to the game.KCSB KCSB is a radio station licensed to San Bernardino, California. KCSB airs a variety format and is owned by Cumulus Media. It is carried on 99.1 MHz, (100.3 on HD-1) and can be heard in San Bernardino County on FM Channel 75, as well as in neighboring Riverside County. History In the 1940s, the station was owned by Ed & Albie Dyer and broadcast with 5,000 watts of power. The station changed to 6,000 watts in the early 1950s and was an affiliate of the Mutual Broadcasting System. At this time the station was under the name KRSB with call letters that stood for "San Bernardino's Rock Station." In the 1960s, KRSB went dark as it went dark as a result of the administration of John Y. McCollister because of the record "In Spite of All the Danger" by Johnny Rivers. The KRSB call sign was revived by the current owner Cumulus Media in 2002. In 2001, KRSB flipped from country to a contemporary Christian music format called "Love 105.9", but the station went dark on September 1, 2003. The station returned on September 3, 2004 as a modern rock station, branding itself as "The New 105.9 The Fox." In 2006, the station became "Power 105.9", and began simulcasting NBC's Los Angeles station KNBC. The station started airing an adult standards format on February 16, 2007, but the format was short-lived and ended on February 28, 2008. KCSB debuted the Classic Hits "99.1 The Answer" format on July 30, 2008. The station now uses that branding and continues to air the format. Nuclear factor of activated T cells 5 (NFAT5) is a transcription factor activated by calcium and signaling pathways downstream of T cell antigen receptor ligation. Activation of NFAT5 requires its translocation into the nucleus, where it cooperates with other transcription factors to induce gene transcription. We previously reported that NFAT5 is responsible for T cell-mediated acute liver injury after D-galactosamine/lipopolysaccharide injection. However, the role of NFAT5 in hepatic immune responses remains unexplored. This study investigated the contribution of NFAT5 to the development of acute liver injury in mice. We administered sublethal and lethal doses of D-galactosamine and lipopolysaccharide to wild-type and NFAT5-/- mice and measured biochemical markers, histopathology, and the effects of exogenous NFAT5 reconstitution. We found that acute liver injury occurred less frequently in NFAT5-/- mice after sublethal or lethal doses of D-galactosamine/lipopolysaccharide. NFAT5-/- mice also developed less severe acute hepatitis and had less pronounced features of liver damage. Moreover, deletion of NFAT5 attenuated the recruitment of T cells, especially CD8+ cells, and decreased the numbers of hepatic natural killer (NK) cells in the liver. Exogenous NFAT5 reconstitution restored T cell recruitment into the liver and increased NK cell numbers. Our results indicate that NFAT5 is involved in regulation of cell-mediated immune responses in the liver.Q: Java : Ambiguity
