City of Beats is a lighthearted role-playing game where you must explore bizarre and colorful worlds by fashioning your own phrases out of words, and by creating your own blend of words, eventually achieving escape from the dungeon. In City of Beats, you can travel anywhere, and collect whatever artifacts you choose: try to get the most mana, or spend it on skills; discover the story that is unique to your own playing style, or enjoy other stories, told by others. It's up to you. System The most common components of this RPG are: Ansible. Bring the world into your hands with the Ansible, a magical object that allows you to produce words with great power. The Core System. Interact with others, speak with your followers and explore the procedurally generated world. The City Generator. Bring NPCs and talk to them to discover stories and secrets about the world. Fetishism. Exorcise the devil of choice from your existence with the forces of nature. AA debris! Last year, I had to replace an AA battery for my outdoor light. Is there any easier or more efficient way of doing this now than last year? I found a new light and tried to replace the old battery. I grabbed a Canon LP-E6 battery from my charger, which I also have since I use that in my Canon PowerShot S7, and expected it to be a perfect fit. It didn't. There's a very short leg of my new light on there; instead of being flush with the body, it sticks out slightly. I suspect that due to the flat shape of the new AA battery, it never touched the original. I may just need to buy a new battery, but is there a better way to go about this? By "easier" I don't mean cheap; the LP-E6 is a bit expensive to me. My "new" battery didn't fit, but I was really using it as a "new" battery anyway, so I didn't notice. At least it isn't dying yet and it works (pump action first shot light). I will clean it up and throw it away when I get to my next dud light. "Is there a better way to go about this?"--Yup, try buying LP-E6 batteries from eBay and Amazon. Their production number is "n/a" on the

In the world of sports, every team has some, shall we say - 'underrated' or 'overshadowed' moment in its championship history. Have you caught the virus that all Boston sports fan have? Any doubts about the Celtics' future finally were laid to rest when the new school mascot, KG-SHU-Fieldhouse, was finally revealed. KG stands for "Kevin Garnett" and SHU is the new University of Kentucky-its name in 2013. Fieldhouse is the school's volleyball and basketball arena. But seriously, can we reach this point? Can we move on from the man who willed us to a new Celtics era? We've seen injuries, too much turnover and no true leader over the past three years. KG led the team to the NBA Finals, a magical legacy. But he also has to overcome tons of bad luck and obstacles, including last season's broken leg and this season's knee surgery. Here's hoping he re-signs before free agency. Starting early this off-season, the Celtics need somebody else. And while Kyle Reece doesn't want to talk about KG's injury, he had a lot to say about the team moving forward. The move also helped sway him from a potential deal to the Nets. The Celtics obviously want to upgrade their defense. They also need more inside depth. Reece is a very good defender. He's well known for his quick shot-blocking ability. But he said there are other factors influencing his decision. "How much money we [can] make in the league this year ... that was probably pretty big reason," he said. "Here they pay you a decent amount of money and they [are] a franchise that knows how to market. But there's always a reason that you go somewhere else. It's not like you're running off to the Jets or anything. [Your career is] just sort of going.” With KG and Rajon Rondo, each on a deal that is good for at least three years and potentially longer, Reece will step into a leadership role. That position is something that Reece, now in his 12th season, is more than ready to take on.
