Sleep quality and physical fitness were studied in a group of 48 old age pensioners (mean age 72 +/- 7.5 years) and in a matched group of young controls. The following tests were performed: a) The Munich Composite Sleep Test (MCS) for assessing the quality and quantity of sleep (Krüger-Willi); b) the Physical Fitness Test (PFT) with the following parameters: upper body strength, flexibility, agility and cardiorespiratory endurance; c) the Women's Health Questionnaire (WHQ), used for assessing health and wellbeing. Additionally, daytime sleepiness was evaluated by means of the Epworth Sleepiness Scale (ESS). In the old age pensioners a significant decrease of sleep efficiency (80.4 +/- 10.0) was found when compared with the young controls (95.5 +/- 3.0), whereas the duration of sleep was not significantly different. Furthermore, a marked impairment of physical capacity in the old age pensioners as reflected by lower upper body strength and flexibility values and diminished cardiorespiratory fitness was found. These results indicate that old age inactivity and the consequent decrease of physical fitness and capability are crucial factors in the development of sleep disturbance in old age. The impairment of health and wellbeing related to sleep disturbances is negligible in old age. Both subjective and objective sleep quality are not impaired in old age.0 . W h a t i s q (l)
