'Arma 3 is what I was hoping for when I first saw the teaser video for the game. It is a strong offering, and one that will easily challenge many of the most popular games in the genre. But it is a solo affair, lacking the consistent multiplayer communities that make some of the biggest shooters so addicting. In addition, Arma 3 does not have a very distinct atmosphere. It does not have that "I wanna be there" feeling that makes so many war games great.' Arma 2 is the greatest game of all time. The best game ever! Unmatched graphics! Spectacular immersion! Impeccable controls! Arma 3 is a step backward in every way. Terrible immersion. Unbalanced controls. Terrible learning curve. Unrealistic physics. Arma 3 also has the worst gameplay of any simulation game ever. The clunky controls, the absurd difficulty in making use of the varied game mechanics and the extremely unrealistic simulation are all problems you have to go through to progress. The lazy scripts and very repetitive and repetitive missions are also a constant source of irritation. Arma 2 has a complete range of varied and fun gameplay missions. Arma 3 has one mission: kill the enemy and get on with the next mission. I can't remember having a boring mission in Arma 2. The most disappointing aspect is that the graphics have come a long way since Arma 2. They look worse in almost every respect. It's almost as if they've made the same poor decision as Crysis 2 where they had great graphics but then threw them away and used worse graphics in the final version. Arma 2 is the best looking game ever made. Arma 3 is the worst looking game ever made. It would actually be illegal in most countries to run it on anything more recent than a 20 year old computer. What's new:

I had always been intrigued by the Tiger Tank 59. The turret is so dominant for the Tiger. Would using a modern EMP (Electromagnetic Pulse) chamber in a modern tank solve it? That's so close to my concept that I'm sure my ancestors, hunting felids, were its ancestors. Originally posted by Tiger Tank 59? Black Hill Fortress Your better off going ahead and designing your own, then you wont have to worry about it being limited to 2 years by DARPA regulations Its a fantasy tank. I already have a superior tank, one that has been previewed (if you didn't find me, I was the dumb beanie with the cocked pistol walking around in the fall). Its a fantasy tank. I already have a superior tank, one that has been previewed (if you didn't find me, I was the dumb beanie with the cocked pistol walking around in the fall). Another? If you really meant it, try (and ACK 'em all, and tell me if you do). For the sake of sanity, I think you'd be better off buying a tank that isn't really a fantasy. Again, the belly is there for defense. Pistols and a secondary weapon won't do much against HE shell. I opted for it because it has a good view of the ground in combat. The reason why I want it for a fantasy tank is in defense. And it does boast good defense over a lot of the tanks of the time, much better than the Tiger. Tiger Tank 59? Black Hill Fortress Quote By: dbone on Apr. 15, 2010, 2:53 AM They might have had the technologies, but it doesn't mean a lot if it's too expensive and too complicated. OK. The cocked pistol gimmick is not a gimmick. It is a presentation of function. They were simple, cheap pistols and only used their secondary. Prone they were just as well protected as a prone infantryman. Really the first practical way to use these was in winter. German snows are good for guns that go into the mud at elevated angles. Here, I'll show you. Winter is coming and when it comes, I will carry fully loaded pistols in my boots. I can be consumed. They need to identify a lateral target move or shoot me in the chest, and if they shoot the
