Kansas Attorney General Derek Schmidt has asked a federal court to let him review a ruling by a federal judge striking down the Affordable Care Act's requirement that most individuals have health insurance or pay a fine. Federal law allows the state to review an adverse decision by a federal judge, but a ruling in a different state is always appealed. The national spotlight, however, shines only briefly before dimming, after some dazzling hours of illumination. • The Supreme Court today will hear oral arguments in an appeal of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals decision that struck down the law. The issue is whether the Affordable Care Act can force individuals into
