An American citizen has been arrested in the UK for allegedly illegally entering the country and seeking to travel to the war zone of Syria. FBI officials confirmed the arrest of the unnamed individual who was taken into custody under the Passport Act on October 27. According to court documents, the individual identified himself as a US citizen and is reportedly from Nebraska. It is unclear from the documents whether the individual has been charged. The arrest follows an extradition request from British authorities, in which they said they were seeking the extradition of the man from the US on behalf of the FBI. The suspect was arrested in England's northern city of Newcastle and was taken to a police station. Officials later moved the man to a prison in northern England to be held for extradition proceedings. "This operation is a result of a joint operation between the National Crime Agency and the UK police forces," the FBI said in a statement. "The FBI encourages US citizens to comply with federal law, which bans those who engage in the solicitation or facilitation of someone to commit a crime of violence or the provision of material support or resources to a designated foreign terrorist organization." FBI Director James Comey spoke to reporters on November 1, noting that the agency had long known that "violent extremists are plotting to come to our country from abroad". "We are asking for the public's help to protect our country and our citizens. This is a public safety issue," Comey said. US President Donald Trump revealed in a November 1 press conference that the suspect was arrested in Britain and that officials were trying to deport the individual. "The United Kingdom is a very important country and they are very close to us. They are
