A new feature in Photoshop for 2020 is the ability to turn your photos into futuristic, sci-fi, alien-like characters with an innovative “Females” feature. The process, called [Femke], starts like normal, with the user taking a photo of themselves, but with the intent to change their expression and the location of their eyes. This new feature works by tracking the movement of pixels from the mouth movement, which changes the location of the singularity, which in turn changes the brightness and color of the eyes and mouth. While it's a fun and funny effect, it might not be the best facial approximation feature and instead may provide a more accurate depiction of the person's face. Check out the tutorial of how the [Femke] process works to see if it interests you. Currently, only a few people in the community seem to have mastered this algorithm and it can take a while before you get the picture right.
