Antoine Deumert Antoine Georges Deumert (26 January 1867 – 25 September 1935) was a French linguist and ethnologist. Deumert was born in Lyon. After studying in Paris, he was appointed in 1893 professor of Romance philology at the Sorbonne (from 1894, chair of general literature). At the end of his career, he led an expedition into the Sahara. Deumert is remembered for his work in the field of ethnology. He coined the term epicrotia. His studies on some hunter-gatherer communities in the Sahara Desert, published as Mœurs et coutumes des Nomades de la Mecque et de Saoura, provided the foundation for contemporary social anthropology. He also devoted time to a description of the architecture, layout, and social customs of the Metropolis of Algiers. He also wrote numerous scientific articles, especially on French language and literature. Among his students were the ethnologist Georges Sapiro and the anthropologist Léon Poliakov.
