A: After looking at the image linked in the OP's question, it's my take that this answer is correct, although, there are caveats that it isn't necessarily the right answer; though, without doing a comparison between the two images it's hard to say with certainty. The difference is most clearly apparent when comparing the remaining info in the first image to the second image: First image: Model Name: 10004A09 Model Number: KMK-29RSE/IK47 Nr of drawers/recesses: 6 Drawer/recess Size in cm: H64 X W64 X D73 Second image: Model Name: 10004A11 Model Number: KMK-29RSE/IK47K Nr of drawers/recesses: 4 Drawer/recess Size in cm: H64 X W64 X D52 The product name for the former is 10004A09 and the latter is 10004A11. I can't see any difference in the product number between the two. The difference between the two product numbers is that the later would indicate that the rack extension could be "stolen" from an earlier model of the same product number and used in lieu of the drawer extension of the unit. The model number indicates that the kitchen was a "KMK" model with "29RSE/IK47" in the variant number. The manufacturer of the extension would likely be "Kino" (KMK). The "Nr of drawers/recesses" matches the "Nr of drawers/recesses" of the model number. The first number in each line is the length of the cabinets, i.e., the cabinet wall. The second number in each line is the distance between the upper and lower cabinets. The dimensions of the lower cabinetry would have been needed in order to determine how large the extension would have to be in order to be able to fit the cabinet below. The dimensions of the lower cabinets would have been known, because the people who made the kitchen are supplying the units. The units were likely made somewhere in Asia, so a more accurate model number would be "KMK-29RSE/IK47K". The model number should be compared to the model number of the original kitchen design, i.e., the bottom centre section of the image in the original 0cc13bf012

This proposal builds on a recent study which suggested that the nucleoside transport inhibitors may enhance the cytotoxic activity of cisplatin and ifosfamide. We have established that the inhibition of nucleoside transport is associated with a significant increase in the cytotoxic activity of the alkylating agents, and a successful continuation of this project would allow us to identify the precise biochemical
