Roku Chief Executive Anthony Wood said Wednesday that his company has over 20 channels of live TV and an array of apps to view it all. His comments come during a rare glimpse into the company's internal strategy, including plans to begin offering Netflix, Hulu and other services on Roku TVs. "We are still growing," Wood said during a phone interview with The Wall Street Journal. "People aren't just buying their first set-top box. So we're still growing the channel portfolio." Roku's latest offer seems designed to attract consumers to their TVs. The company is pitching its streaming media device as a good value, since it costs about $40 and offers the channels owned by partners such as Fox and NBC. Consumers can add additional channels, either with a monthly subscription or via a $3-per-month fee for sports channels like NBC Sports. Roku isn't addressing the $180 price of the Amazon Fire TV stick, but it offers more than $40 worth of channels for $40. The Roku TV is headed to retail later this month, and it will cost $80. "We view them as equivalent," Wood said of Roku's TV and stick. The new device is bundled with a Roku 3 streaming player, but consumers can buy Roku 3s online for about $60. "We are trying to differentiate on the value proposition," Wood said. "It's why you don't see a lot of hardware companies that make products for living rooms." While Roku is still in the midst of its test market in South Korea, the company recently expanded into India and is adding live channels for users outside the U.S. Roku announced last week that it would begin streaming music, through the Play Music app, as part of its strategy to launch the Netflix app on its devices. Roku has also begun

Peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor- α (PPAR α) is a member of the nuclear receptor superfamily and is highly expressed in the liver. PPAR α plays an important role in fatty acid metabolism, energy expenditure and regulation of cholesterol. PPAR α is involved in the regulation of cholesterol homeostasis and cholesterol 7 α -hydroxylase (CYP7A1), the rate-limiting enzyme of bile acid synthesis, is a direct target of PPAR α . In this study, we investigated the effects of knockdown of PPAR α on triiodothyronine (T3)-induced CYP7A1 mRNA expression and its transcriptional activity. PPAR α was knocked down using a lentivirus system. Activation of the PPAR α /CYP7A1 pathway was demonstrated by overexpression of PPAR α in HepG2 cells using a lentivirus system. Upon silencing of PPAR α , T3-induced CYP7A1 mRNA expression and enzyme activity were suppressed. Activation of the PPAR α /CYP7A1 pathway was demonstrated by the increase in CYP7A1 mRNA expression and enzyme activity with T3. Suppression of PPAR α by its knockdown did not affect the basal activity of CYP7A1, suggesting that PPAR α is not a positive regulator of CYP7A1. DNA binding of PPAR α to the CYP7A1 promoter was not affected by PPAR α knockdown. In conclusion, this study provides the first evidence that the

PPAR α /CYP7A1 pathway can
