Cloning and functional expression of human perforin-2. Human perforin-2 (HP-2) cDNA, encoding a new type of perforin, was cloned by the reverse transcription polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR). Human HP-2 is a direct homologue of the murine perforin gene (Prf-1) and also shows homology with two other genes, murine and human granzyme A and human interleukin-1beta (IL-1beta). Human HP-2 mRNA was undetectable in resting lymphocytes, but was strongly expressed in thymus-derived lymphocytes and in peripheral blood mononuclear cells (PBMC) activated with anti-CD3 antibody. In contrast, expression of human HP-2 mRNA in Jurkat T cells was not induced by IFN-gamma. Expression of human HP-2 mRNA was also detected in various T cell lines derived from peripheral blood. Transfection of human HP-2 cDNA into human T cell line CEM induced perforin-like cytolytic activity against either K562 or EL4 T cell target cells. In the process of analyzing the regulation of human HP-2 mRNA, the gene was found to possess two different promoters, P1 and P2, each of which has its own TATA element and initiator. P2 activity was shown to be stronger than that of P1, and the transcription activity was inhibited by cyclosporin A. Transient expression of HP-2 mRNA was also observed in cells transfected with the P2 promoter construct. These results suggest that P2 may be the functional promoter of the human HP-2 gene and that its constitutive expression as well as the induction of human HP-2 mRNA may be under the control of the promoter containing the TATA element. The present invention relates to a new and improved apparatus for breaking open and opening plastic cigarette containers, which apparatus is of the type containing at least one rotatable sleeve arranged coaxially to a cavity in a rotationally drivable conveying arrangement and has a plurality of radially outwardly projecting movable cutting blades. The cutting blades are pivotably connected to the sleeve in an area radially spaced from the axis of the sleeve and are movable between a position whereby the cutting blades engage into the container and sever the bottom of the cigarette container, and a position by which the cutting blades are out of engagement with the

In New York City, the Center for Urban Initiatives (CUI) is on a mission to dramatically expand the roles, contributions, and contributions to the diverse array of urban stakeholders that depend on the generosity and advocacy of philanthropy. From the very beginning,

CUI has focused on the work of improving conditions for people living in distressed urban communities and neighborhoods. The nonprofit's first endeavors focused on criminal justice reform, job training, and expanding access to health care. Three years ago, the Center helped to create New York City's first-ever safe injection site for people who use the drugs by sharing their expertise in harm-reduction strategies. Today, CUI works with stakeholders throughout the city to address addiction, homelessness, small business development, the arts

By: Tom Dunkel At Mobile World Congress (MWC) 2019, Qualcomm and Gionee will present a joint solution that does away with the concept of wireless charging. The technology will be showcased in Gionee's smartwatch, dubbed Gionee Watch 6, which is said to support multiple wireless charging frequency bands. Qualcomm supplies the wireless charging technology that is called 'Theta'. In the traditional method, wireless charging only works with a specific charging station. While the new technology allows the device to charge wirelessly using multiple frequencies, and charge wirelessly at the same time too. This promises more power efficient use of energy on the device. In addition, the technology is said to provide peak efficiency charging with more seamless use of a space. Gionee Watch 6 will come in three variants, one of which is wire-free. It supports wireless charging technology that Qualcomm uses to provide charging energy to the watch, and other parts of the device for wire-free charging. Gionee Watch 6 will also be a fully-functional smartwatch, with Google Assistant support in addition to the basic features and functions. Talking about the new feature, Qiao Miao, Product Marketing Director of Gionee Digital Watch said: "With the 'Theta' technology, the back cover of the watch can be flipped over to make it a wireless charging station. This provides the user with more convenience.” Qualcomm had invested an estimated $30m in the Theta project as part of its investment in Gionee, which was seen as a strategic
