Writing a new interwiki API for wikitext - whalesalad ===== girzel Hey Todd, I'd also like to build an interwiki for wikitext documents, but I can't see a way to make it a major core part of the service. It seems we are locked into this format, and we have no real alternatives. I'm assuming you mean "we" as in you, the server operator, and not you personally. Can you suggest what the next possible steps would be? Or am I missing something? Should I raise an issue on the discussion page and hope someone will give me some feedback? ~~~ toddmotto I'm not actively involved in the project but I do respond to issues. If you raise an issue I will review it. Regarding the next steps you could host your own wiki locally or externally and then use external links as sub domains of your own site. If you wanted to use wikitext you could also use a third party api like ours to reference your document content. ~~~ girzel The approach I mentioned earlier is the only one I could find that lets me work with paragraphs and still be able to link to sections. The problem is that the interwiki protocol is only able to have a single url for a set of paragraphs, and if you split a paragraph into separate wikitext fragments, you'll have multiple url to the same document. I could imagine allowing for multiple url by setting a special field in the article to give multiple urls, but it seems really bad form to allow this. ~~~ toddmotto What do you mean by "paragraphs"? ~~~ girzel I mean that paragraphs have a definition. That definition is just a set of paragraphs, which may or may not span the boundaries of the original text. Here's a sentence: >That's what some people call a "paragraph". And here's a more elaborate definition, starting on the second line: >Let's define
