Frogholes are a desperate need in Ants; something that keeps us chugging along. It is like the milk to our Ants, but is also what makes the ants go to work and keep that production line going. Even though frogholes move slow, they provide other benefits for Ants, such as a bit of nourishment. It is hard to live without nourishment and work with limited nourishment, especially when there are another obstacles in our way. We have yet to discover why the land allows this massive excess of frogholes. Despite their low production rate, they are like a domino effect, and they could destroy the once flourishing crops. We might be a tiny ant, but we do know how to solve problems! In Ants, players must solve puzzles by earning points and advancing through the levels by collecting food for their workers. The goal is to feed the workers and make them work well to minimize the production of frogholes. With a bit of luck, players will end the game with the lowest number of frogholes. Stasis Valley is also a fictional story that the play has gone through, exploring its own narrative as it plays. About Waking a Valley: Waking a Valley is an adventure game set in the unknown. What is it all for? Just now, what is the point? What have I done with my life? What have I done with my day to day? Am I wasting my time? What if you look in the mirror and ask yourself those same questions everyday? What if each answer was the only one you had? Q: Condition handling in Scala I'm writing a template engine in Scala and struggling with the conditions. I have the code below, which uses Scala's regex and also a regexp from libxmljs, which was already used in the template engine. I'm struggling with the logic which looks like this: if the regular expression string is found, ignore the regexp, and process the other parts of the string if the regexp is not found, don't remove anything from the string and process the other parts Here is the template engine working with the regex. You can copy and paste it to try it out. import scala.util.matching.Regex object TemplateEngine { def main(args: Array[String]) { println("Trying the regex") val regex = new Regex("\\w+") val str = "a b c d e" println("the regex is "+regex) println("the str is "+str) val parts = str.split("\\w+") c9d1549cdd

The copyright holders claim their personal rights to the photos. Florence founded the Normal School for Naturalists in 1924. She was the director for 33 years and worked very hard in bringing up hundreds of children from around the world. The school closed on 10-11-1938, due to the internment of children of Japanese descent living in Southern California. "When the children returned to school they were taken from them. Many came back later. Many never returned. In a house with the rest, Florence was murdered by her husband, with a gun. Today there is a memorial to her over the road from the school." Today, in the absence of Florence's important work in caring for children, the Naturalist program continues as normal when Florence's spirit is still with us. She died as a young woman but she lived well. – Jerry Chesnut, 2000 Author: Jerry Chesnut The first African-American to have a degree in Forestry, Florence Besse was also the first black educator to work with the L.A. Forest department. For her work in saving the trees of Southern California, as well as the Black children of Los Angeles during the era of Japanese internment, Florence was honored with awards and accolades that she received over the decades; in 2004 she became the fourth teacher in the history of the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County to be awarded the Museum Award. In addition, Florence's home on Colima Street in Watts was declared a Los Angeles Historic-Cultural Monument. She is the subject of the book, "Florence Besse: A Flinnoisian's American Epic Life" (Jerry Chesnut and Walter Himes, University of Texas Press, 2007). It's a wonderful body of work and has been a joyful challenge to me. I found a beautiful colored version of her image to frame and display proudly in my home. Florence, I have a good bit of history with your name coming up over the years, and my search for you has led me to your Aunt Joe. I was hoping, when you first contacted me, that I had been able to find you, but alas, I had not. I am so very glad to have found your wonderful story. You

The era of the Golden Age of Gaming was a turning point for video games. Few developers were content to just make games about shooting aliens. There was a desire to reach a more rounded population, with The Eidolon and the Pulseman joining forces to make the Cyborg. This 4-part musical series is the soundtrack to a new era of gaming. Inspired by the movie The Warriors, it's an 8-bit journey through the past. In Part One you'll find a soundtrack full of games like Earthworm Jim, Legend of Kage, and Luxor 2. In Part Two, Portal plays alongside The Talos Principle, and part 3 sees ports of classics like Firewatch and Dear Esther. Lastly, part 4 brings us full circle, with games from the likes of Star Trek 2 and The Last Guardian. The Soundtrack is 100% royalty free. It can be used in any project. The songs included in this pack are NOT actually played in the game. All the sounds you'll hear are extracted from the music. Files included: The Music of The Warriors: The Past - Disc I: The Past [8-bit] Notes on Use: You don't need to own the game to use the music; just rip it into a folder and use it. But I've included the option to be in sync with the scenes. You can try it out with any of the games listed here: Bonus: I've also included 10 additional game credits (either a track-by-track breakdown, or the music as the credits roll). These don't actually play in the game, but you can include them if you like. I'll do my best to clarify the credits, but some of it might be a little fuzzy. A quick note before I dive into this pack: To be in sync with the specific scene, I've divided up the music into four parts. My thanks to my Soundtrack Bundle for giving me a kickstart. Here we are again. It's time to take a look at another of my Games of the Year bundles for the year, and this time it's about video games. I'm no "gaming" expert, but it's something I am more exposed to than I probably should be. In any event, I'm pretty pumped about this.100 What is the value of -1 - 3 - ((-6 - 4) + -10)? 16 What is the value of 0 + -15 + (-
