If you have a printer, you'll most likely be aware of the annoyance of having to print a document to the default printer only to find out it is simply not connected to the network. Typically, you'd have to go online and use the network to find the connected printer, and the other way around too. Luckily, Windows 8 comes with the option to plug in directly through the Settings app. If you have any questions, suggestions or would like to see other network printers - please contact us. How to set up a Wi-Fi printer in Windows 8 Plug it in to the USB port on your PC and let Windows 8 find the printer and connect it to your network. You have to sign-in to the network before Windows 8 allows you to connect to the printer. If it does not appear in the list, go back and sign in to the network, then click on the correct network and the correct printer. Click on the Wi-Fi Network icon on the top right of the screen and the Wi-Fi printer will appear in the list of devices. How do you reconnect to a printer you just removed? While it is not possible to connect to a printer directly from Windows 8, it's possible to set up the desktop control panel to allow you to print to it by default. Go to Control Panel. Click the Devices and Printers tab, then locate your printer in the list, and right-click on it. Click Printer properties. Click the Advanced tab, then click on the button to Add Printer. Enter the printer name you wish to use, and Click OK You can now print to it every time from your PC by clicking the Print button in the upper right of your screen, or create an automatic print job. Printing You can access the previously created print jobs by going into My Printer. To print a document, go to the File menu and select Print. Click the Pick Printer button at the top right. Select the printer that you wish to use, and select the options you want to use. How do I remove a printer from Windows 8? Go to Settings. Click Control Panel. Click Device Manager. Select the printer you want to remove and right-click it. Click Uninstall. How do I connect a printer that is missing to my computer?

Click here to see the full review[Evaluation of a new device for the analysis of urinary protein loss]. Our goal was to evaluate the accuracy and reliability of a new device for the measurement of albumin and total urinary protein losses from urine (Catalyst). We performed 824 24-hour urine collections. The results obtained by a bio-chemical method and by the Catalyst at 24 and 72 hours were compared. Comparison was done at 2 days intervals for the Catalyst and at day 0, day 2, day 4 and day 6 for the bio-chemical method. For the bio-chemical method, spot urines were collected from the same patient during the previous 24-hour period. Normal values were taken from 8 healthy volunteers. For the Catalyst, we studied 2 groups of patients: 1) patients with hypertension with proteinuria, and 2) stable outpatients with minimal proteinuria. The interpretation of results is based on a 24-hour urinary protein excretion of 2 g/d. For the first group, the figures obtained with the Catalyst were significantly higher than those obtained by the bio-chemical method. The relative standard deviation was comparable to the standard method. In the second group of patients, as albumin levels are close to normal, the difference was not statistically significant ($p = 0.7$). The correlation between the bio-chemical method and the Catalyst was very good whatever the time. The samples for the analysis of excreted protein and specific gravity were stored at 5 degrees C. The method gives a good correlation with the bio-chemical method. It is practical, accurate and not dependent on the laboratory.

The MTA's East Side Access project will jump the rails next fall, Metro has learned. The MTA has announced plans to move forward with the construction of a second tunnel under the Hudson River, according to Metro. An announcement is expected to be made sometime next month. The $4.5 billion project will feature two new 1.5-mile tunnels under the Hudson River to connect the New York and New Jersey subways. The tunnel will start at Pier 40 and end at 14th Street and Third Avenue in Manhattan. The MTA said the two tunnels will provide improved access to Penn Station for rail riders traveling to or from the New Jersey or New York City's Long Island suburbs. The tunnel will also connect to the new Metro-North New Haven Line, which will provide access to New Haven, Conn., and Grand Central Terminal. The MTA plans to build the project's main tunnel in three sections. "With the new East Side Access project, riders can expect to make their way to Penn Station faster and more conveniently," Joseph J. Lhota, the MTA's chairman and CEO, said in a statement. "These will be the first two tunnels ever constructed under the Hudson River, and it will be an exciting moment for New York." The first section of tunnel is expected to be open around the end of 2017. The $3.2 billion Manhattan portion of the project will be constructed by a team of five U.S. companies, including a joint venture between Tutor Perini and the Chinese state-owned construction company China Communications Construction Co., or CCSC, according to Metro. The project is one of five that the MTA is working on in the city, including a Second Avenue subway extension in Manhattan that will run from East 96th Street to East 110th Street, improvements to Harlem's Willis Avenue Bridge and improvements to
