Install Windows XP with the missing Partition.A crude oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico created "an underwater explosion" Saturday night that sent a massive fireball shooting into the air and stirred up large amounts of crude, according to the Coast Guard. In a statement, the Coast Guard said the "fireball" caught by a boat on the Mississippi River was "inexplicably coupled with an explosion." A total of 73,000 barrels of oil was recovered, the statement said, and no oil has reached the shoreline. The Coast Guard did not identify the company responsible for the leak, but did say that BP -- the drilling company that operated the well -- reported that crews have successfully recovered all the oil. The Coast Guard said in its statement that numerous witnesses from boat, airplane and helicopter reported an explosion "accompanied by a large fireball that reached the surface." BP has "reacted to the incident" and requested the Coast Guard and the National Transportation Safety Board investigate "any related activity." The announcement came moments after a federal court in New Orleans issued a temporary restraining order that temporarily halted operation of Transocean's rig, which was drilling a deep well for BP. It's the latest in a series of events that has plagued the gulf since the April 20 explosion at BP's Deepwater Horizon rig that killed 11 people. Watch: The impact of the oil spill Investigators have confirmed that BP's drilling platform on the ocean floor failed, leading to the explosion. But how the rig's explosion caused a massive oil spill had yet to be determined. The maximum crude oil discharge rate from the well, the world's largest offshore oil well ever, was 12,000 barrels a day, far higher than an initial estimate of 5,000 barrels.
