The Dread X Collection: The Hunt is an anthology of seven short horror games that were produced by many talented indie developers. Each of the games are either a shooter, or shooter/performer. What they all have in common is their craftsmanship, creativity, and heart. The Hunt brings you another addition to the Dread X Collection. A collection that has been created as a way to continue to explore the world of Dread X and the unsettling stories that the games have to tell. Tricky Fricky was a black thumb. He had never had success with gardening or with anything else which required a lot of technical skills. He'd always had a lot of trouble with tools and household objects, and had spent a lot of money on devices and gadgets, none of which had ever really worked out. He had spent a few good hours with his stepladder one night and had probably broken it trying to get on it. No way was he ever going to be able to fix it. He was a black thumb. Not long before his thirtieth birthday, Tricky had been visiting his uncle, Ebenezer, for lunch. Ebenezer's old greenhouse was located out behind his house, and Tricky decided to pop round and give it a look. It took him no time at all to find out it was beyond repair. He was planning to get rid of it when he noticed the remains of an old weed pest spray and started to play around with it. Things started going wrong almost immediately, and in a fraction of a second the greenhouse was in a state of complete disarray. Perhaps a minute or two passed, perhaps just a second. It was impossible to be sure. What was clear was that the entire greenhouse and its contents had erupted into a spray of plant matter and broken glass. Tricky was horrified, and found himself covering his mouth with a hand to try to suppress a scream. There was a blood-curdling crash, and when Tricky opened his eyes a second later he was face to face with a topiary a full grown plant that looked as if it had been shaped into a human form. Its face was a horrific blend of flesh and bark. Its eyes were red and seemed fixed on him. It reached out for him with long, gnarled fingers. Tricky retreated from the object as quickly as he could manage. It had no legs, but its feet were hard and fast. He tripped and fell to the ground. As soon as

About The Developer: David Szymanski (DUSK, The Music Machine, Squirrel Stapler) is a long-time indie game developer, amateur horror filmmaker, and founder of the long-running indie horror festival, The Fright Night Film Festival. He likes to read. He likes to scream. And he likes to make games. He lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Rounding out the Dev Team is Jennifer Chen (Ark 43, Unnamed Project) who has worked with Szymanski on several of his titles. Together, the pair have already made two chapters in the Dread X Collection series. When Dread X Collection: The Hunt was created, they intended for all seven shorts to be standalone stories. This is my first game ever, and it's just as fun as it is terrifying. I've been a horror fan my entire life, so I feel like this year has really been one of firsts for me. I'm doing a lot more than usual this year, and this is my first game. I'm proud of it, but I still need to be better. Gameplay: DUSK (Dread X Collection) is a third-person horror game. You play as a detective who opens a crime scene, discovers a dead body, and you're on the hunt. Every few minutes, you get a notification, and something happens. You need to investigate, solve the mystery, and change the world. DUSK is mostly a silent game, but you do learn a little more every time you play. For example, you unlock a detective form, which changes how you interact with the world. Different animations, different responses. It's a really great d41b202975

What's new in Dread X Collection: The Hunt:

(Greatsword) We're back from the mountains and after a quick rest we were ready to traverse the desert. We took a train to Szechuan and from there we took a jeep to a village where we could find a boat to take us to this new area. Victor was our guide who is now tired of the boring climate. He told us we could rest on the beach so we decided to do that, that's where we found this peace of Hell. After many weeks we crossed the island and we had gotten quite good at surviving there. We were enjoying ourselves till one day we heard a voice in the distance. We ran off the cliff after the voice and were near death. A storm was coming from a distance when we got to the edge of a small island a girl was trying to reach the ship. Victor tried to calm us down and claimed the ship was further from the island than it actually was. We weren't worried, since we usually know where we're going and who we're going with. Whatever, we went back. Soon after, we realized the voice was mistaken. We saw a group of bandit and we could tell everyone on the ship that got lost trying to reach the group. Eventually we found the correct direction and were able to return to the storm. Victor wanted us to rest. We thought it was for the best but only a few minutes later we heard the voice again. When we went and looked we found the bandits approaching with a greater force than before. We immediately headed to a location where we know the enemy won't be able to find us. We found a cavern that let us see we were safe but on that ominous note, we were separated from Victor, two of our teammates, and their vehicle. We decided to go further, even though we were exhausted and injuries overwhelmed us. We went for miles, we saw bears and some flying birds. We were glad the voices stopped for a while. When the voices returned and we decided to go back. When the voices were getting louder again, we were full of anxiety and we took refuge. When the voice got too close we split up but I was getting sick from all the injury and I just fell over. I could have been killed but it just didn't happen. The sound got closer and suddenly the ground shook, we were startled by a huge footprint. When the
