We are using REV-Aid to help organize our home. It works but I notice that on some of the doors (not all) there is a white sign with what seems to be the occasional red stroke. Here is a sample of what I saw this week: It's a warning sign and an indication that one should not push. I don't think we need to add anything to the site but I thought I'd bring it up here, in the interest of getting more folks to use REV-Aid. What do we think about this? A: Some years ago, there was a discussion whether or not this sign was valid. After some back and forth in the related conversations, the consensus was that it is valid, as long as it is placed correctly. On a door that is on the floor, it should not be placed on the door frame and nor on a door that is up on a wall, as this would make the sign nearly completely invisible. On the other hand, a sign might be placed inside the door, which makes it very difficult to read. On the bright side, the door frame also serves as part of the writing, and so the sign can be placed anywhere inside the door frame. As a matter of fact, the door frame is also the only place where it would make sense to put a sign as this is a warning about the door. So: It is valid and if used correctly, it should be visible on some surface inside the door It is also a valid idea to put the sign on the door frame It is also a valid idea to put the sign on the door handle In fact, I would not put any of those things as these distract attention from the door itself, which is the place where the sign is meant to be. So only put the sign on surfaces inside the

I don't want to get into comparing a $60/mo internet service and a $7000/mo electric service, but it's important to put things into perspective. I have a lot of sympathy for the costs of internet/electricity in rural areas. Hopefully in time we'll be able to alleviate that. I don't think your estimates are unreasonable. I would not expect a full replacement of this kind of system from a cloud-to-cloud provider (assuming that you don't want to replace your internet service provider as well). Google is really only a small part of the story of reliability, though, and it's not a technology problem — more of a company problem. They have a corporate culture issue, that they fix by buying up other companies and (most of the time) not releasing their source code. It's a very closed system and it's easy to blame the technology. In the end, though, it's the company culture that gives rise to
