Category: Autocad Category: Autodesk Category: Free downloadsThe insulin-like growth factor II receptor is critical for NIH-3T3 cell survival and resistance to apoptosis induced by the Raf kinase. The insulin-like growth factor II receptor (IGF2R) has been shown to bind to the epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR), however, its effect on growth factor receptor signaling is unknown. To investigate the role of IGF2R in cell survival and proliferation, NIH-3T3 cells stably expressing either wild-type IGF2R or the dominant negative, truncated form of the receptor were used. NIH-3T3 cells stably expressing wild-type IGF2R grew in a serum-free medium whereas NIH-3T3 cells transfected with the truncated receptor were unable to grow. The majority of NIH-3T3 cells stably expressing IGF2R were resistant to apoptosis induced by the growth factor deficient medium in combination with the epidermal growth factor (EGF) receptor inhibitor, AG1478, whereas the number of apoptotic cells was higher than that in the control cells in the absence of AG1478. These results suggest that the IGF2R plays an essential role in cell survival and proliferation in the absence of growth factor signals by interacting with signaling molecules including Raf kinase. android:text="Delete" style="@style/Point_9" />
