Factors relating to poor inhaler technique among patients with asthma. The aim of this study is to determine factors related to poor inhaler technique among patients with asthma. We studied 161 patients who were diagnosed with asthma and had been treated with inhaled medicines at the outpatient clinic of a medical university hospital between May and June 2004. We evaluated their inhaler technique using a checklist developed for this study. The percentages of respondents who used the inhaled medicines correctly were 68% for the metered dose inhaler, 65% for the pressurized metered dose inhaler, and 65% for the dry powder inhaler. Results from logistic regression analysis showed that if subjects correctly understood how to use the inhaler, they would be more likely to use the appropriate inhaler (p // Copyright 2010 The Go Authors.
