COMPANIES FOR WORKING MOTHERS Despite the rollercoaster ride in 2001, have work-life initiatives fallen out of favor in American corporations? According to a survey conducted among human resources managers, over the past two years, companies have become less interested in young mothers. According to Susan Biederman of Mothers Grow, who has been working with mothers for many years, if you look from the point of view of the company's strategy, you can see that the company starts working with mothers because they do their jobs well and are more loyal to the company than young ones. mothers who have not yet decided on their role. dd2bc28256
