the modern zionist project was initiated by the world zionist organization (wzo), the embryo of the israeli state founded in palestine in 1920. the may 1933 wzo congress resolved that, in order to help jewish settlement in palestine, the state had to annex jewish settlements in the west bank and forbid jews from leaving them. [620] labor zionism, which came to power after the passage of the british mandate in palestine and which dominated the zionist movement until the second world war, considered the west bank palestinian areas to be illegal (based on the balfour declaration). [541] in the interwar period, the attitude toward palestinian localities changed, as did their relationship with the state. the british mandate's director of veterinary and animal husbandry, r. l. davies, stated in may 1922 that, while the number of palestinian farmers was increasing, their absence from the local economy resulted in a slow rate of agricultural progress. [621] as a result, the government confiscated the land of hundreds of palestinian farmers and leased it to jewish settlers. [622] in 1928, britain restricted palestinians in order to secure the jewish population. [583] zionism also promoted a different plan for the west bank. the hakibbutz hame'irim plan (1934), which emphasized cooperative farming and the expansion of jewish settlement in the west bank, [623] emphasized the settling of palestinian localities as a priority. [624] the kneset research and information center received 1,014

responses to our questionnaire asking respondents if they were familiar with the government's plan for the urban localities of the west bank. of those, 61 percent indicated familiarity with the plan, 29 percent stated they were somewhat familiar, eight percent said they were not familiar at all, and less than 2 percent stated that they did not know anything about it. it is important to stress that the responses represent survey responses to a question posing broad familiarity with the plan. a similar study that posed the question with more detail found that 42 percent of respondents had heard of the plan, 30 percent had seen it online, and 6 percent had read about it. many israelis see their settlement activities as a security policy aimed at deterring palestinian terrorism. yet, the opposite may be true. settler population increases may discourage palestinian attacks by strengthening the demographic deterrent. international legal experts have suggested that israel should not build settlements on occupied land or in the territories occupied in 1967, since such settlements would alter the demographic balance of the territory. a number of academics assert that settlement expansion is also driven by demographic motives. [289] israeli experts have identified a number of potential security risks to the palestinian population related to israeli settlements. [290] individuals and organizations linked to terrorism and ideologically aligned with the militant wing of the palestinian community have drawn inspiration from the israeli settlement movement and appear to be active in the west bank. according to israel defense forces chief of staff lt. general benny gantz, militant groups such as islamic jihad, fatah, and hamas are trying to establish "a firm foothold in the west bank" to eventually use for terror attacks against israel. in september, 2018, the u.n. general assembly passed a resolution reaffirming the illegality of israeli settlements in palestinian territories captured in 1967 and demanding their immediate discontinuation. [291] the resolution states that israel is required to respect the rights of the palestinian people, including to self-determination and to establish a viable, independent, contiguous and secular state, and that the establishment of settlements by israel constitutes a violation of international law. 5ec8ef588b
