Important updates for Photoshop user and Lightroom users, some of the new features are designed to simplify the editing process in order to help you maximize your output. The new App-based workflow makes it easier to go from draft to completed art with just a few clicks, while the innovative app-based graphics system helps make your work more accessible and collaborative. The new "dynamic" undo (which is most likely going to be renamed to "track changes") allows you to recapture edits to one layer, or even to a group of layers, if you want to later revert to a previous state with a few clicks. While this system is undeniably convenient, it may come as a surprise to photographers who don't know that they can simply activate the layer they want and use the eyedropper tool to highlight it instead of doing the "alternative separation" workflow. For the benefits of this, the App-based workflow needs some iteration and tweaking. If the system is to stay on the level of Lightroom, it must give photographers some finer control over settings and tools. While it may seem more complex than the traditional workflow, there's no reason for that to be the case. I just went back to a 5.0.2 version after not using it for years. How do I get all my stuff and flat files? the installed version had 1.5 masses. Why is my /Library/Graphics/InDesign/ folder/file structure gone? Did I break something? Is this the new standard? The new update was done 9th Nov 2017. Is it cause of me stupid editing business practices? Desperate that 14Mb size I paid for a long time ago? Am hoping I can get my stuff back and the upgrades worked "right".
