Mirillis Action 3.9.2 Free Download (Win)In recent years, in the transportation of animals, management of the space in which animals reside is being widely conducted in order to reduce the transportation costs and the occurrence of stress in transported animals. For instance, regarding sea turtle eggs, in most cases, the eggs are transported under the condition where the eggs are carried in the air. In this case, the lower the temperature, the longer the transportation time. Thus, it is required to transport the eggs while maintaining the eggs at a temperature that is sufficiently higher than the ambient temperature at the point of transport. Also, in the case of transporting eggs by a sea turtle rearing facility which uses the eggs as meat, the eggs must be transported while maintaining the eggs at a temperature that is sufficiently higher than the ambient temperature at the point of transport, so that the rearing facilities can ensure that the eggs reach the destinations within predetermined time periods. In the case of sea turtle eggs, there is the possibility that heat may be generated in the eggs due to a transitory temperature decrease when the eggs are being transported, which in turn, may result in a lower cooling rate. The lower cooling rate of the eggs, in turn, may contribute to problems such as a decrease in the hatchability. The above-described temperature decrease
