Extension of the UFRA clinical trial; second interim analysis. Uniformed and Focused Radiology (UFRA) is a randomized clinical trial comparing two methods of performing MRI to detect acute stroke. Subjects undergo MRI (which includes diffusion-weighted imaging, perfusion-weighted imaging, susceptibility-weighted imaging, CT perfusion imaging and fMRI) using either standard or tailored imaging protocols. The goal of the trial is to establish the best imaging modality for detecting and classifying acute ischaemic stroke. It is open to subjects with symptoms of acute stroke (Characterization of the signal transduction and expression of MHC class II, interleukin-12 and tumor necrosis factor-alpha on human T cells following peptide stimulation. T cell recognition of self and foreign Ags involves several TCR ligands, TCR triggering, costimulation and expression of accessory molecules. In T cells the MHC class II (Ia) molecules are a discrete functional unit composed of the beta 2 microglobulin and the class II-associated Ia (HLA-DR/DP/DQ) Ag. In this study, the functions of the MHC class II molecules, their interaction with Ia-restricted CD4+ T cell stimulators and costimulators and the expression of interleukin-12 (IL-12) and tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha) were evaluated following stimulation with several peptide analogues. T cells from peptide-stimulated individuals were able to activate CD4+ T cells and respond to alloantigen. T cells incub
