What It Does: The Pen may be one of the fundamental tools of all designers. The Pen tool allows you to do almost anything that a brush does, except from the inside of shapes. By drawing shapes with the Pen tool, you can easily remove unwanted parts of a design (a large shape, for example), move points using absolute location, and morph shapes into new shapes. What It Does: The Stylus tool is used to draw irregular shapes, lines, or text. It can be used in standard ways (to draw straight lines and move around a scene), and there's a variety of special tools including the Oval, Freeform, Calligraphic, and Paint Bucket tools. The Pen tool is also similar to the Stylus tool in most respects, and works in the same way. Equivalent to "The Select tool". Allows you to select an area of an image or an object (when you click on the text and press enter, it selects the text. Or just drag to select). It can also be used to select a range of pixels to desaturate or desaturate, pick hue or saturation, or apply curves. Another way to select an area is Rectangular Selection, this works the same way as the Select tool, except it lets you select an area that is rectangular rather than round. What It Does: The Lasso tool is used to select areas in an image or object (when you click on the text and press enter, it selects the text. Or just drag to select). You can then use the tool to measure and draw shapes around the area. You can pull shapes together to form a selection by holding down the Option (PC) or Command (Mac) key while adjusting the size, angle, or offset of a marquee tool. e3d0a04c9c
